Do you remember when?

Prior to the initiation of a Board of Directors, the Club was governed by a President and other elected officials consisting of a Vice President, Secretary, Treasurer and Sergeant-at-Arms. The Club also had an Executive Committee consisting of all executive officers, committee chairmen and elective officers of the previous year. According to the By-Laws active in 1986, a special nominating committee of five club members was appointed by the President at the first regular meeting in November. The committee would meet in a special and secret session to nominate elective officials. Those nominated appeared on the ballot. Nominations by club members could also be added to the list immediately following the recommendations of the nominating committee. The annual election of officers occurred at the first regular meeting in December and the officers elected were installed at the first regular meeting in January. At that time the exiting President would “pass the gavel” to the incoming official.

Regular meetings of the Club, with members present, were conducted on the first Tuesday and third Monday of the month. For an example of a typical month, in January 1986 there was a Regular Meeting with members on 1-2-86, an Executive Meeting on 1-6-86, a Dinner Meeting for members on 1-20-86 and another Executive Meeting on 1-27-86. Voting by members on various issues was conducted at regular meetings and consisted of votes cast by those present. Therefore, very popular issues would result in large meetings with sometimes over 100 members being present to vote. As a result, those that turned out in numbers won their issue. If you got out of line at a meeting, however, you were charged a dime by the Sergeant-at-Arms.

Why You Keep Lifting Your Head by Don Currie

The first and best thing to do to prevent head lifting is to mount to the cheek first, instead of the shoulder. But there are three reasons you might subconsciously lift your head from the stock after shifting the weight of the gun into the shoulder:

1. Gun fit. If your comb is too low, you might subconsciously lift your head, in an effort to see the target as it disappears behind the barrel and receiver.
2. Gun mount. You might be digging into the stock with your head as you mount. This can cause the target to be occluded by the gun, and you'll lift your head to see it.
3. Ejecting from the gun prematurely. If you're dismounting the gun before the shot is complete, you're not maintaining acute visual focus on the target as it breaks. Follow through with your eyes and it will help you stay on the gun.

How Do Trap Shooting, Skeet Shooting, Sporting Clays And Five Stand Differ?

Like driving a golf ball, shooting a shotgun is a skill you can improve with practice. And clay pigeon shooting is the ideal way to get this practice. Through it, you can master your shooting skills.

There are three major forms of clay pigeon shooting. Each can be found at sporting and shooting clubs around the country. The best clubs offer all three as well as a shooting sport called Five Stand.

Trap Shooting

This is the original type of clay pigeon shooting. It began in the 18th century and for decades used live birds. Artificial targets—glass balls and then clay discs—were introduced in the late 1800s. By the first World War, trap shooting had evolved into the two main ways it's practiced today.

- American Trap: Practiced at most shooting facilities in the U.S. It uses a single launcher located in a low trap house to throw clay targets away from shooters standing in a line of five stations. The trap house is in front of this line of shooters. As the game progresses each shooter stands at a station, fires at a series of targets (each presented at different angles), and moves right to the next station.
- Olympic Trap: Like American Trap, but instead of using a single launcher, it throws targets from a line of 15 machines, still positioned in front of shooters. Each machine throws a clay at a different, but set, angle.
- Double Trap, Wobble trap, Down-the-Line, Bunker trap: Variations of American or Olympic Trap.

Skeet Shooting

Is the second oldest type of clay pigeon shooting. It was created in the early 1920s by a grouse hunter looking to sharpen his skills. In 1926, a shooting magazine introduced the sport to America and offered $100 to anyone who could come up with a name for it. "Skeet", derived from the Norwegian for "shoot", won.

There are two types of skeet: American and Olympic. Both use a pair launchers set in two different height towers positioned across from each other. As shooters follow a course from one tower to the other, the launchers throw clay pigeons at a variety of angles designed to simulate the shots upland hunters encounter in the field. Compared to trap, Skeet targets are thrown closer to the shooters and in a wider variety of scenarios.

How Do Trap Shooting, Skeet Shooting, Sporting Clays And Five Stand Differ?

Sporting Clays

The third major type of clay pigeon shooting and the youngest. Sporting clays was developed in the U.K. and brought to America in 1980. Since then, it has exploded across the country to become one of the most popular shooting sports in the country.

Sporting clays is shot on a course made of 10-15 stations. These stations are laid out one after another, like holes on a golf course. Some stations feature one, two, or more clay-pigeon launchers, all throwing targets at different heights and angles. There are no official rules regarding how these launchers must be positioned, so no two sporting-clays courses are the same.

Compared to trap and skeet, sporting clays offers the widest variety of hunting-style shots. This makes it great way to sharpen your skills for the season or to keep them sharp all year.

Five Stand

If you were to put trap, skeet, and sporting clays in a blender, Five Stand would pour out. It features a line of five "stands" for shooters and a number of launchers arranged in front of the shooters, to their sides and even behind them. Shooter are presented five targets at each station, 25 targets in all.

Five stand is more exciting than trap and throws a wider variety of patterns than skeet. It's faster and cheaper than sporting clays. For hunters, it's a great game, giving you the chance to work on shots simulating everything from fleeing rabbits and flushing to quail to ducks dropping into a set of decoys.

Guns For These Games

While you can shoot any of these games—especially five stand—with your favorite bird shotgun, if you want to be competitive in trap, skeet, or sporting clays, you'll want a gun tailored to them. These shotguns offer little differences—like weight and chokes—which equal to big advantages when you pull the trigger.

- Trap guns: These are heavy, have one or two long barrels (up to 34"), tight chokes and are almost always twelve gauges. Because of their weight, once you get these guns going, they swing smoothly—and stay swinging. This makes it easier to follow through on shots and soaks up a lot of recoil. Trap guns also have relatively straight stocks. This helps them shoot high so you use a technique known as "floating your target."
- Skeet guns: These are also heavy, but their barrels are 26"-30" long and their chokes are very open. Like trap guns, their weight soaks up a lot of recoil and helps you to keep the gun moving on crossing shots. Compared to trap guns, their stocks may have a bit more drop. While twelve is the most common gauge for skeet, people also shoot small bores and .410s.
- Sporting-clays guns: These are lighter than trap and skeet guns, have more choke in them skeet guns, and are stocked more like hunting guns. Barrels are usually 28"-32".

Which Game Is Best For Hunters?

Live birds, unlike clay pigeons, have minds of their own. Every time one flushes, you don't know where it's going to go: Straight away, to the left, or back towards you. The best way to prepare for all these scenarios is to do a few things.

First, shoot a lot of skeet, sporting clays or five stand. Either one will prepare for a busting pheasant or a bursting covey of quail. More importantly, when you shoot these games, use your hunting gun. While a competitive target gun can improve your score on the range, it's not the gun you'll carry in the field.

Finally, when you shoot, try to mimic the stance and posture of a hunter approaching a pointed bird or anticipating a flush. Hold the gun low (not mounted). Keep your eyes on the sky and a little weight on each foot. And think about how you're going to smash that clay when it flies into view.

Practice is from 4 PM until 6 PM. We shoot pistols first and then rifles, going home by 8 PM. Most people will let you try their air guns, so you can see what it's like to shoot a modern air gun.
